We claim to be a strictly patriotic, unselfish, and determined body of citizen soldiers, upon which our country relied with full confidence in her hour of sorest trial, and on whose shoulders fell the brunt of that long, bloody, and fearful struggle for the maintenance of our now united and glorious Union. We do not desire or intend to antagonize or break down any patriotic organization, nor any body of men whose bond of union is that they saw service under our country's flag during the civil or the Spanish-Amer-ican and continued

Of States—a prosperous and glorious country. In order to show the gratitude they feel we should enable them to distinguish for themselves out of the heterogeneous mass of ex-soldiers yet living who are justly and unquestionably entitled to the name of veteran.

It is generally conceded and believed that those who entered the service prior to July 1, 1833, had but one object in view:

More than nine-tenths of the members of the Legion are honored and respected comrades of the G.A.R., and at the present time we have as members more than 500 past and present National and Department officers of the G.A.R.

But the present generation is laying the foundation for a true history of the warfor the Union, and we are assisting to make that history by setting apart the survivors of that noble army of veterans-veterans, in truth, to whose courage, fifility, partinacity, self-sacrificing spirit and long-continued suffering is mainly due the final and glorious triumph of our arms.

No man who gave long and continued service to the Union cause by enlisting in the ranks of his country's defenders prior to July 1, 1863, for three years, can afford to throw aside the glorious heritage of fame which, by such service, he is enabled to bequeath to his posterity.

The homorable discharge of a long-service veteran in the Union armies and navy is a patent of nobility greater by far than any held by monarch, prince, or lord, whose title comes to him by accident of birth alone.

It is a duty we owe our posterity, and to the rising generation seeking to know to the eniment officials who pass biased indegeneration seight of the members of the under the present time old and infirm, and are only receiving a very small pittance, dealt out begrudgingly by Tament officers of the union the present time old and infirm, and are only receiving a very small pittance, dealt out begrudgingly by Tament officers of the war that they are personal matter, and that th that those who entered the service prior to July 1, 1853, had but one object in view: that was the preservation of the Union. There were no large bounties before that date, nor were there any fears of draft, consequently those who shouldered a musket or wielded a saber felt that it was a sacred duty to offer their young lives in the defense of their country's honor.

It was thought, therefore, that the dividing line, as indicated above, would that they are ready to again fall-in. Not to beg, but to demand better treatment. THE LOGAN STATUE.

An Artistic Commemoration of the Last Commander of the Army of the Tennessee.

The pedestal for the statue of Gen. John A. Logan, the contributions for the erection of which were solicited and obtained through THE NATIONAL TRIBUNE, has been erected n Iowa Circle, in the center of a beautiful and fashionable district of Washington, and a much admired by all who have seen it. It is much the finest and most artistic of the sedestals of any of the statues in Washington. Upon the foundation stands a high block of beautifully-pelished granite. Upon the west face of this is a fine bronze alto-relievo, showing a council of war of Generals of the Army of the Tennessee planning a campaign. A map of the country is spread out. Logan stands in the center, and around him are Gens. Morgan L. and Giles A. Smith, and others. The portraits are excellent, and the posing spirited. This represents Logan in war. Upon the opposite, or eastern face, he is represented in peace-taking the oath of office as United States Senator, from Vice-President Arthur. Around him are grouped Senators Conkling, Cullom, and others. Upon the north face is a figure emblematic of peace, and on the south face one of war. The work is by the noted sculptor, Franklin Simmons. The statue, which is being cast in Rome, will not be ready for some months yet.

Towering six feet four in hight, and of massive build, martial bearing, and preposeesing manners, he was a personage in Grand Army circles everywhere who will never be forgotten. He was a valiant soldier with an enviable record.

The present Department Commander, Col. George W. Knaebel, of Sante Fe, was honored with the office about four years ago, and he was again elected, and unanimously, although he made a lengthy and forcible speech against his own election, on the ground that it was not fair to other eligible comrades and to the Department, because it would lose a vote in the National Encampment. vote in the National Encampment.
